YOUTH CARRIED NO WEIGHT IN THIS HANDICAP

Officer Sat on His Clothes and Swimming Pool and Then Took in Charge.

(Edmonton Bulletin)

Friday was a scorching hot day, and this is what happened to one of the young men of the city.

Earl Stinson was his name; a youth of 18 years. Earl arose early Friday morning, and as the forenoon proved so terribly hot he decided to spend the afternoon in a swimming pool located close to Swift's packing plant.

The day was hot enough, but the city slush was doubly hot—hot on the trail of Earl, for they claimed that they wanted him in the worst way on a charge of shoplifting.

Detective John Watson was wandering around the swimming pool, undoubtedly endeavoring to cool off a bit, when his naked eye chanced to squint at a naked form in the pool.

This naked form proved to be none other than Detective Watson's objective whom he had been trying to conquer for the past week. A detective Watson passed up an opportunity, and this time Watson didn't.

He located Earl's clothes on the bank and at once decided to make a hot seat out of them. No sooner had the detective made this advance than Earl recognized the strong arm of the law and fled.

He edged his way slowly over to shore and then made a sudden jump for the land.

Earl darted up the road, stark naked, and the detective started in pursuit. Yes, it was a cool sight for the many who witnessed it, but it was an awful hot chase for Earl Watson. Earl took advantage of a few sharp corners and several side streets, and was successful in eluding the detective.

He was not alone in his flight.

A suit that you select to live with must be of a style that will "grow upon you"—that you will like the better the longer you wear it.

A semi-ready suit will live a long time, and for that reason the fabric and fashion must be along the lines of true art—with every curve and cut just right.

The two essentials of service are worked into every garment—the perfect fit, the durable cloth, the good tailoring, the pleasing style—and the standard of value which the price in the pocket assures.

Can we do more? We add expert advice in helping you get just what you will best like to-day and after.

Two Notable Canadians

Two notable Canadians were made honorary members of the Canadian Institute of Civil Engineers at the annual meeting of the Institute recently held in Montreal.

Lord Shaughnessy, the Chairman of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and Sir John Kennedy, the dean of Canada's engineering profession. Although Lord Shaughnessy is a professional engineer, and therefore could not become a regular member of the Institute, he was made an honorary member, in view of his distinguished career as the head of the Canadian Pacific Railway, in which position for many years he has been intimately connected with engineering, and probably employed more engineers than any man in Canada.

For the presentation there was one of the most distinguished gatherings of engineers seen in Montreal in a long time.

The presentation was made by Mr. Walter J. Francis, the retiring president of the Institute, and as the two veteran Canadians received their badges they were greeted with prolonged applause.

A singular honor was bestowed upon them, with the presentation of solid gold badges of the Institute, which were exact replicas of that presented to the Prince of Wales. When the Prince was in Montreal last year he consented to become an honorary member of the Engineering Institute, and in honor of the event a special badge was struck, engraved with the crest of the Institute and the Prince's name on the badge. Since then ten more of these gold badges have been struck from the same die, and ten honorary members elected and presented with these golden replicas of the Prince's badge.

In this Lord Shaughnessy and Sir John Kennedy will find themselves in distinguished company such as their own attainments warrant.

The ten present wearers of the golden badge of honorary membership in the Engineering Institute of Canada are H. R. H. the Prince of Wales, His Excellency the Duke of Devonshire, the present Governor-General, H. R. H. the Duke of Connaught, who preceded the Duke of Devonshire as Governor-General, Brig-General Sir Percy Grenville, who made his fame on "valley work with Kitchener in the Sudan," Sir Geoffrey Augustus Hartley, K.C.M.G., London, England, the Earl of Aberdeen, another Governor-General, Dr. Frank D. Adams, of McGill University, and Dr. W. H. Hodgson Ellis, of Toronto.

Lord Shaughnessy

Sir John Kennedy

University. Verily a galaxy of distinguished men with whom even such citizens as Lord Shaughnessy and Sir John Kennedy may well feel honored to be associated.

Prolonged applause greeted the two new honorary members as President Walter J. Francis pinned the golden badges on their lapels, a note of pathos being added by the fact that Sir John Kennedy will never see his, his eyesight having completely failed him during the past number of years.

The applause was renewed when Lord Shaughnessy rose to reply. The Chairman of the Canadian Pacific said that although he could not claim the honor of being an engineer, his many years as President of the C. P. R. had brought him into very intimate relations with the engineering profession, and he had always had the highest respect for the members of the profession, and never found them break their trust. In engineering matters I always relied entirely upon their expert advice, and the Canadian Pacific was never the loser for it. Of course there were mistakes made during the years, but each was jointly responsible, and the C. P. R. did not pass the blame on to the engineers, but went to work to profit by any mistakes made—and there were not many.

In conclusion Lord Shaughnessy made brief reference to the emerald-green years, which had brought a new President to the Canadian Institute. He said that in all probability he would not have many years to wear the golden badge of honorary membership in the Engineering Institute, but that he should always treasure it with pride and a warm gratitude for the honor conferred upon him.

Sir John Kennedy, who sat with his old friend, Lord Shaughnessy, also made a brief reference. He spoke of the importance of the emerald-green years, especially in the upbuilding of a young and developing country such as the Dominion. In fact he expressed the hope that the Canadian Institute, the organization of the engineering profession, would prosper and grow.

The ceremony closed with heart cheers for Lord Shaughnessy and Sir John Kennedy.

However, Earl was captured early in the evening, just before the result of Watson's untiring determination. Earl was completely clothed when captured, and when questioned as to where he got this extra wardrobe, he related the following story:

"When I go swimming, the kids take pleasure in stealing my clothes after I get into the water, so today I thought I would fool them, and I brought an extra suit along with me and hid it in the bush. After I got rid of the 'Dick' I beat it back to the bush and put on this extra suit."

Yes, it was an exciting day for Earl, as well as for Detective Watson and a hundred or more citizens of North Edmonton.

BOOTLEGGERS ENGAGE IN DAYLIGHT BATTLE

Amherstburg, Ont., July 16.—For the second time in the course of a few weeks, Amherstburg yesterday was the scene of a gun fight between rival forces of bootleggers, with the distance that while the first fight took place on the banks of the river in darkness, this latest fight was in the town during daylight and lasted for about two hours.

There was no police interference till two provincial officers arrived from Windsor. Several men are reported to have been injured and four are under arrest at the county jail, but the authorities refuse to give their names.

IDLE THOUGHTS OF A BUSY FARMER

We visited the Red Deer Fair last week and stayed longer than was anticipated. We made the mistake of taking our John Henry car on the grounds. Having seen the midway and the maidens in blue from afar, John Henry decided Red Deer was the place in which to locate for a season. On attempting to return home, J. H. balked, libbed, bared and otherwise misconducted himself, and refused to proceed further than North Red Deer. He was, however, induced to visit with Mr. Irish, whose hospitality was so pressing that John Henry remained there till the end of the show.

"Have you seen the Big Snake?" Well, not for quite a spell. Prohibition has made it rather expensive to see even little snakes or lizards these days.

We heard a lot of dissatisfaction over the Band contest award. People who claim to be music high brow declare that the Bandit Band from Rimby had it all over the Ponoka boys in points on every score. They affirm that the rendering by the Bandits of such classical pieces as "Over the Garden Wall," "My Grandfather's Clock," "Tommy, Make Room for Your Uncle," etc., was in a class by itself. It was whispered that the prize went as it did, because the judges were mistaken "Yankee Doodle" for "Boysie Water."

Spelldrivers for prohibition tell us John Barleycorn is in his coffin. Some leakage from the coffin got into Red Deer during the Fair.

"Oh, Maad, I'm so worried! You told me to put that piece of wedding cake under my pillow and I would dream of my future husband." "Yes, but the dream it was." "That's what worries me, I dreamed of the Red Deer Band."

THE IRISH DISORDERS

It must occur to anyone who reads the endless reports of crime and disorder in Ireland that there is something more than a political revolt going on in that distracted country. As a matter of fact, there is. The trouble began of course with the Sinn Féin party, which set out to prove how general is the dissatisfaction of the Irish with the union, and how helpless England is to preserve orderly government in Ireland. A good many of the outbreaks are still planned and ordered by the officials of Sinn Féin, and a good many others are undertaken without authority but in pursuance of the general policy of that organization.

The situation has got beyond the control of Sinn Féin. The result has been what may be predicted when a whole nation sets itself to defying the constituted authorities, and when the government, in the hope of a peaceful settlement, temporizes with the law-breakers. Criminals of every sort have taken advantage of the paralysis of law, and something very like the excesses of Bolshevism has appeared in various parts of the island. Landless men, either tenant farmers or laborers, have begun to seize the land they want. In many of the remote parts of Ireland farmers and landowners have been dispossessed by force, sometimes after an offer to buy their holdings at a low price, sometimes without such an offer. When an offer is made and rejected, the farmer is lucky to escape with his possessions; in such a case a good many men have been shot from behind a hedge, and there have been no authorities to punish the murderers. Like the Bolsheviks in Russia, too, the Irish country dwellers are burning the mansions of the well-to-do. Hardly a day passes without our hearing that some historic or beautiful house has been destroyed by fire.

At the same time the Irish labor party—particularly the transport workers—is frankly Bolshevik, and though it has suited its purpose to work with Sinn Féin in destroying British authority in Ireland, its enthusiasm is not for an Irish government but for Sovietism and the Moscow International.

The evil grows daily. It alarms the more thoughtful leaders of the movement for Irish independence, particularly the Roman Catholic clergy, who are willing enough to help Ireland to be independent but who are unwilling to help it to turn Bolshevist. It is reported that Mr. Lloyd George has his faith in the Roman Catholic church for a peaceful settlement, with the Irish, and that negotiations are going on by which, in return for English support of the Pope's claim to a seat in the league of nations, the church is to use its influence to bring Ireland round to the home rule bill. That may not be the case, but it is probably true that one reason why the British government takes no more determined steps to suppress disorder is that it sees events moving toward a situation in which Sinn Féin will be forced to come to an understanding with Great Britain in order to save Ireland from complete moral and social disintegration.

THE SPARROW IN EGYPT

By Robert Hunter

The most successful colonist of Great Britain is her English sparrow. The English sparrow has so ubiquitously won his place in the sun that the sun "never sets upon him." In 1916 the temple of Zeus at Athens resounded with his chirpings, as if found. Long ago he entered the holy land and took possession. Not long ago I found him nesting on the crown of a colossal statue of Rameses the Great in the Luxor Temple, in Egypt. Indeed, he is well on the way to usurping the whole of the Nile valley. This "occupation" of the English sparrow in Egypt the Egyptian students do not look upon as an unusual good. Here are some of their remarks, made in the dispassionate calm of my composition class in freshman English at Assuit College:

"The sparrow is that small bird which we hear its voice and see in every place in the world nearly. It can be easily hunted. The government allows you to kill it. Sparrows make ravages upon the crops. They eat grain and wheat and every kind of plantation. They eat the ripe dates and fall them to the ground. They eat the seeds after the fall sows them. When they enter a room and live in, snakes will come to devour them, and snakes are very dangerous.

"Sparrows do noise which disturbs classes and chirp so high that, if two men were sitting in a room and two sparrows entered the same room, the two men cannot hear each other's speech, because of their loud and evil chirping. They are uncivil, because they make their bird noise without taking care to be polite to man. They have no good voice as other birds. It seems to me as if God had put his bird to trouble to mankind."

Another freshman writes thus: "A sparrow is an ugly bird. Its fashion is very bad. It is very common, and we see it every day, especially at evening. It is blackish or grayish in color. The sparrow has a little purple under his neck in which he puts what he steals. This bird is very evil, and everybody hates to look at it or listen to its loud disturbing voice. It eats corn, lentils, beans, maize, and everything it sees, and eats its fill."

"It enters the dwelling rooms and chirps on the beds and cupboards, and makes a great noise and disturbs the inmates. It brings bad 'germs' which caused diseases. Sometimes it builds its nest, in which it lays eggs. We see its nests in our houses and school classes."

THE NEWS WEEKLY SERMON

By Rev. G. D. Armstrong

Thy faith hath made thee whole—

Mark 16:52.

The miracles performed by Jesus will present very little difficulty to the minds of those who believe in His divine nature and power. He is Himself a miracle, greater than any act he performed, and the mystery of His personality is many times more wonderful than anything He ever did or said. His place in history and His marvelous influence in human affairs is a fact, the importance of which is recognized with increasing clearness as the ages roll by. Browning reasons well when he argues, "I say, the acknowledgment of God in Christ accepted by thy reason, solves for thee all questions in the earth and out of it, and has so far advanced thee to be wise."

The writers of the New Testament were not careful to explain the method whereby Jesus effected the wonderful cures ascribed to Him. There was no demand made upon them to meet the requirements of critical and scientific enquiry. The works of Jesus were used to demonstrate the divine nature of His personality and His power was not limited to the material world but He exercised sovereign power in the realm of the moral and spiritual, as well. These witnesses which were of such value when the New Testament was written have been called in question in this age, and we must either prove our proofs, or find our evidences for Christianity upon other lines than those used in other ages.

The scientific mind will refuse to discredit evidence, which is beyond the scope of its observation. It will not rashly declare certain alleged facts to be impossible, merely because it has not observed these facts and does not understand the laws which may have operated to produce these results.

So many marvellous discoveries have been made, and the horizon of man's knowledge has been so greatly widened, that most people will suspend judgment upon matters that a less scientific age would reject as beyond the region of possibility.

Dr. Buckley lays down two principles which should guide us in our judgments; namely, that before endeavoring to explain facts, it is necessary to determine what these facts really are, and that so long as it is possible to find a reasonable explanation of what undoubtedly is, there is no reason to suspect and it is superfluous to assume the operation of supernatural cause.

Our faith in the truthfulness of the records of miracles in a remote past is based upon our conviction that the claims of Jesus can meet the test of practical experience in the present age.

There is no doubt that Jesus was familiar with higher laws which may be used to suspend the ordinary operation of nature and that as our knowledge of the mysteries of life becomes clearer we may be able to discover the method whereby many marvellous deeds were accomplished.

Faith implies an insight into the working of God's laws, an understanding of His ways with men, and insight of the student who studies the laws of chemistry, of biology, of physics, is quite in harmony with the faith of the man who seeks what is placed before him for his nourishment, or for the restoration of his health.

The influence of mental power over physical conditions is too generally recognized to require any comment here. Many wonderful examples of the power of concentrated attention in the healing of the sick might be

CLOUDBURST DOES MUCH DAMAGE IN S.E. WASHINGTON

Farm Buildings Demolished And Orchards Uprooted in Severe Storm.

Spokane, Wash., July 14.—Farm buildings were demolished, orchards uprooted, wheat was washed away, several farm buildings were destroyed and other damage was done by a wind and rain storm in the Palouse section of Southern Washington last evening, which for a time cut off communication and led to reports of fatalities at Moscow, Idaho, and at Pullman. No lives were lost, however, although two men on the state college farm at Pullman were slightly injured.

The poultry buildings, sheep, horses and bull pens at Washington State College were destroyed, causing a loss estimated at $50,000. A portion of the Northern Pacific tracks in front of Pullman were washed out and on one section four miles west of Pullman a wall of water seven feet high swept down the narrow valley, carrying everything in its path. Several families had narrow escapes from drowning. As much as a half of rain fell in 15 minutes. Boulders and gravel were deposited to a depth of several feet on some of the best land in this district.

Lewiston, Idaho, was also in the path of the storm where four houses were washed away. Trouble at the Astoria Creek power plant put the lighting system of Lewiston out of commission. A train was stalled by the rush of water.

Rushing water which overtopped the levees caused groffers into basements of numerous business houses in Spokane, causing losses to stock which have not yet been estimated. Telephone lines throughout the city were put out of commission by the lightning, which also burned out the lights in hundreds of residences.

FREAK ELECTRIC STORM TIES UP CITY OF SEATTLE

Seattle, July 16.—Street cars were stopped, houses and streets were darkened, motion picture theatres were compelled to close and the city was subjected to a dozen other inconveniences as a result of a freakish electrical storm that struck Seattle at about 10 o'clock last night.

For nearly half an hour nearly every car line in the city, including the Everett and Tacoma Interurbans, were tied up, and every street lamp in the city was out.

The Aftermath of Action

(By Henry Chas. Suter)

THAT HUT

Oh, for such a place today, in the ardent desire of many a returned lad.
And it was some but for sure. Of course it was the regular standard type, with one half built with stage and auditorium for shows and its twin held scores of tables where boys could eat and drink, or sit and smoke and chat. There were writing tables of course and the usual long canteen counter. The orderly of this hut came from a responsible position in civil life, and was given this job in virtue of the fact that he had failed to find another in several other spheres of the struggle. For instance, he had vainly endeavored to persuade the army to overlook his age and give him a chance to enlist. Then again he was of such a corpulent nature that they would not take him in the Red X, so he came into the Y service with the spirit of usefulness which is its characteristic. His attitude to the boys was both paternal as well as maternal. He possessed a well balanced, well stocked and God fearing mind, a gift of wit, a deep sense of humor and an immense good nature.
Of course it could not be said that the hut was absolutely clean, because that would display ignorance of the impossible so far as that quarter was concerned. The boys for whom the hut existed could not keep clean. How could they? They worked in mud, slept in mud, ate in mud, traigned in mud, on the chairs, on the tables, in the auditorium, and, in short, all over the place they shed—mud. But then it was hard to dodge that but, for none could control his movements when near that hut, because that orderly was a genius to cook: his doughnuts were magnificent, his cakes were paragons, his coffee was delicious, but his "bug-juice," well, in a word, was superb. It was a fascinating drink concocted from mixed fruit juices and

"bug-juice" was the glowing and fervent tribute the boys paid it, so you bet it was good. Then there was always something going on there, games, concerts or somebody playing the piano with an abundant but so professional could do justice to.
But the secret of the success of that hut did not rest so much in these things, because though tired out with the day's work that orderly would never give up while there was a lad around needing his service. So they confided in him and told him their secrets. In fact he knew by instinct when a lad stood at that counter with empty pocket as well as empty stomach and gave that provender which had not been paid for in such a way that the camouflage was not even detected by the next in line for something to eat. Then there were times when the padre was absent, and the orderly was asked to take the service, and he could speak too, but you never heard him "preach" but all enjoyed the service immensely. Then he gave advice, that was gratefully received, and medicine, thoughtfully and thankfully taken, made promises and faithfully kept them, lent money and most of it was returned too. Why, many was the time that he put a tired lad to sleep who had a troubled soul. For he had a happy knack of getting a lad with a secret alone in his kitchen. He would pull a chair up to the fire for him, tell him to put his feet in the oven, and get 'em hot, and then while feeding the lad with some special tit-bit and mixing him a hot egg-nog, would soon be able to abstract the thorn from the poor lad's flesh. Such was the hut to the weary soldiers who wandered there even by circuitous routes, and such was the orderly who kept things going. Oh, for such a place today, many a poor returned lad longs. And since that but orderly returned, he has not had much to tell of all the brave deeds he did, but never mind about that, I guess you can write him down as one of the heroes alright.

EXAMINER'S REVIEW OF SOUTH AFRICA WINS PROVINCIAL MARKETS THE KOLAPORE CUP

Calgary, Friday, July 16.

Cattle of better than the ordinary quality were on the Calgary market at the end of the week and the prices are quoted somewhat higher with the best steers at $11.50 and the top on cows $9.75, but fell lower on these prices. The best steers are quoted from $11 up and the choice cows $9.75 up, and the market on this class is brisk. There is not much butcher demand for the steers that are not really good, but the lighter weights have been well taken as feeders, though prices on these was lower, with the feeder steers from $9.50 down. Good grass cattle may be coming on the market very soon now and it is a good time to watch carefully. Veal has been selling considerably better and the range on them from $11 to $13.75. Not many bulls offered and the market slow.
Receipts for the week were light.
Edmonton market is showing considerable stability and the prices on beef and stocker cattle are firm, with last week the best steers quoted from $11 to $12, and the best cows $9 to $10.

Hogs
There was keen competition for a time during the week and hogs were advanced from last week and close up to $18.90, but this did not last and yesterday the price was down again to $18.75. There were not many offered, this morning and the price was $18.75.

The hog market at Edmonton has been holding steady, with sales around $18.50.

Sheep
There were a few sheep sold yesterday at Calgary; lambs made $13.00, wethers $10, and ewes from $7 to $9.
Lambs are quoted a little stronger
at Edmonton, and there is a better demand for sheep.

Horses
Very little doing in horses and quotations are hard to make as buyers are very scarce. With the general favorable prospects from a crop point of view, and a good supply of feed, it would certainly seem that the market this fall should be something worth while. The few buyers who are in the market for heavy horses of an inferior quality will pay up to $500 for them, but there are so few handled that it can hardly be called a market.
Light horses are selling for any old figure.

Grain
The feature of this week's market was the resumption of trading in wheat for future delivery in the American exchanges. Other grain prices have been grading lower for cash deliveries and oats have been considerably weaker for the past few days and with the favorable crop prospects all over the Canadian West it will be hard to start any bullish movement.

Produce
Eggs are in brisk demand in Alberta and prices are advanced this week and most quotations around $13.50.
Some of these are for storage but most of them being put into immediate use.
Milk and cream production is still heavy, and the creameries and cheese factories are reporting heavy receipts.
Butterfat prices are unchanged. Creamery butter prices unchanged. Dairy butter is in firm demand and straight receipts worth from 36 to 41c and old fancy table butter 40 to 42c. Old crop spoils are unchanged in price and will from all appearances meet requirements until this crop comes in.
Some shipments of old hens and roosters are being made to the markets and bringing good prices, hens from 23 to 25c and roosters 17 to 23c.

Wool
No change in the wool situation and eastern advices are still that it is advisable to withhold sales for a time.
Hides
Market is very quiet and prices are still quoted from 7 to 10c on beef hides; kip skins 8 to 10c, and calf skins 13 to 15c.

MINING INDUSTRY MAY BE OPENED UP

Gypsum Deposit Discovered by Prof.
Allan Near Ft. McMurray.

Edmonton, July 16.—A gypsum strike is reported from Ft. McMurray, where the government salt drilling party is at work. Hon. J. L. Cote has received a wire from Prof. J. A.
Allan, who is in the north on geological work for the government, that a bed of gypsum was struck during the operations on Wednesday, at a depth of 510 feet.

No information is on hand as to the character of the deposit except that it looks promising, and that steps will be taken to put a casing in at the well. The core of the drill will be brought down to the university for testing.

Mr. Cote says that the drilling for salt will be continued, and that there are hopes of finding it before long.

If the gypsum deposit proves to be of genuine quality and quantity, double mining industry may presently be opened up in the McMurray district.

DRUMHELLER HOSPITAL FORMALLY OPENED

Accommodation for 42 Patients, and Equipped in Most Modern and Up-to-date Manner.

Drumheller, July 14.—After three years of struggle to overcome the obstacles met in one of the largest districts in the province, having an area of 32 townships, and in one of the most difficult to organize, the hospital board of Drumheller district witnessed the consummation of its efforts yesterday afternoon, when the Drumheller district municipal hospital was officially opened by Hon. C. R. Mitchell, minister of public health.

The hospital is the largest municipal district hospital in Alberta. It has at present accommodation for 42 patients. It is pleasantly situated on the banks of the Red Deer river on the outskirts of the town of Drumheller. With its up-to-date equipment and careful attention to detail in the finishing and fittings, it is unusually well equipped for a small hospital and aroused a keen interest in the visitors who inspected it yesterday.

The staff has been selected with Miss M. Mingay as superintendent. Miss Mingay, who is a graduate of the Vancouver General, and winner of the Seldon gold medal for surgery in her post graduate year, 1917, was superintendent of the municipal hospital at Lloydminster for a year and a half. The nursing staff include three other graduate nurses, Miss Y. Howatt, Miss A. Allen and Miss K. Bishop, and five undergraduates, Miss E. Milne, Miss G. McDonald, Miss Creighton, Miss Robertson and Miss Spence.

THE FORMAL OPENING.
Following a luncheon given in the lower sun room of the hospital to the guests by the board today, speeches were made by Hon. C. R. Mitchell, local speakers and visitors, George H. Webber, chairman of the board, presiding. Mayor Gordon delivered the address of welcome to the visitors and impressed upon his hearers that the hospital and its services belong to the people of the district, and warned them against an erroneous idea that the town would derive all the benefit.

BURNS NO MATCH FOR BECKETT.

London, July 16.—Tommy Burns, one time heavyweight champion pugilist of the world, was stopped in the seventh round of what was to have been a 20 round bout in Alberta last night by Joe Beckett, heavyweight champion of England.

The seconds of the Canadian fighter threw up the sponge after Burns had taken counts of seven and Burns protested and desired to continue the unequal fight, but his plea was in vain. It was clearly a fight in which brute strength was pitted against age. Burns is nearly 13 years older than Beckett, and he had not engaged in a boxing match for many years. Three months of hard training had not reduced his waist line, and he appeared to be sluggish when the fight began.

It seemed that Beckett could have ended the bout in the second round, when Burns, to save himself, repeatedly clinched after having received a series of blows to the body and head. Nevertheless the ex-champion came back in the third, and this was his best round. He outboxed and outmanoeuvred Beckett. His blows, however, lacked the old time strength, and he could not hurt his rugged opponent.

THREE IS A CROWD

(By Charles A. Hoyt)
"Help! Want somebody come? Help!" A thin shriek echoed from the little grove by the lake that George Eastman and Herm March were pursuing in their automobile. George stopped the car abruptly and looked at Herm.

"Come on!" said George, and with an effort wriggled out from under the wheel. George was stouter than Herm and so the other bent him to the ground.

Together they ran toward the grove. When they reached it they saw an excited woman standing on the shore of the lake and wringing her hands. Her gaze was fixed on a curious object that floated in the water a rod or two from the shore.

"It's floated off," she wailed, and in answer to George's questions, added, "It's a tank; my husband is putting in the waterworks on this estate. A day or two ago he rolled the tank into the lake to soak up, and all of a sudden it takes a notion to float off."

"It'll be on the other side of the lake in a couple of hours," observed Herm sagely. He sat down on a stump and regarded the tank. "The wind is square offshore."

"I s'pose you'll all there and let it," said George sternly. "You'd better stir your stumps and get after it for this lady."

"Did you see it then?" Herm exclaimed with some show of excitement. "It rolled half over."

George stared at the tank, which was certainly rolling in a peculiar manner. It was a wooden cylinder, perhaps sixteen feet long and eight feet in diameter. It was closed at both ends, but as one end swung toward them they saw a square hole in it.

"Let it roll," said George shortly. "We might waste out and drag it back."

"It's too deep," said the woman, half hysterically. "It floats away over across the lake. Ad won't be able to finish his waterworks on time and may lose a lot of money. O dear!"

In the end George and Herm climbed aboard a ticklish-looking fishing raft and, with a couple of boards, paddled toward the tank. Several times the raft dipped dangerously.

"Take care," cried George. "Don't be so clumsy."

"Take care yourself!" retorted Herm. "Don't be so blamed fat. You're sagging your side way down under the water."

He paddled furiously, and finally they managed to reach the tank. "Now then, easy!" commanded George, clutching the edge of it. "I'll hold the raft up close, and you climb on with your board. Then I'll follow, and we'll paddle it ashore."

"You're a good schemer for other folks," said Herm as he claved the slippy sides. "Why don't you crawl on first and haul me up?"

"All right," said Herm. "I'll be right up to the edge of the square hole and vaulted to the top of the tank. Heaved a third of its load, slipped up at a rakish angle, and Herm slid into the tank. The raft, with a couple of boards, floated in the rear of the tank.

"Fate!" he gurgled. "Why didn't you say you were going to do that?"

George reached down and clutched Herm's hair. "You told me to do it. Come on!"

Herm had climbed up as far as the square hole, when he glanced in and was suddenly galvanised into life. George did not have time to haul Herm up; Herm fairly flew. He went right over George to the other end of the untidy tank.

"What in the world—" began the amazed George.

"It's inside—a big yellow eyes—big as a skinned horse."

George stared at him as if he had thought that Herm was a demon. "If I had your imagination I'd travel with it," he said finally. "Of all the—"

Suddenly he clutched the tank wildly, and in his scramble to regain his balance he lost his board and tried vainly to recover it.

"Look at that now!" he snarled. "Do you want to dump us both? Don't sit on one side like that!"

"It ain't me—look!" yelled Herm. George turned. A hairy face with snarling lips, and wicked, gleaming eyes was staring at him over the edge of the tank. Two capable faces fringed with bushy eyebrows were hooked on either side of the face.

"S-s-s-s-s!" said George faintly, and then began to crawl towards Herm's end of the tank. The end the beast was on rose slowly in the air.

"Keep back!" howled Herm. "Come another foot and this thing will stand on end."

George stopped. "What is it?" he asked as the creature stretched himself up on the tank, shaking its wet feet one after another. It had an absurd, stubby tail that jerked spasmodically from side to side.

"It's—it's a wildcat!" said Herm. "How in the dickens did it get here?"

"I can't swim a lick," said George, moving a foot closer to Herm's end of the tank.

"Stop!" screamed Herm as the cat's end of the tub rose in the air. He crawled rapidly up to George. "What are you trying to do? Dump us all in together? Wait now!"

Pointing himself, he threw his board at the beast's head. The beast dodged adroitly. The tank seemed to hesitate a moment, then, in spite of their frantic struggles, rolled slowly over. They all three scrambled their best, but the cat was the only one that stayed on top. Both men plunged headfirst into the water.

As Herm's head appeared on the surface he saw George's hair floating close at hand; clutching it with one hand, he swam a few strokes until he could get a hold on to the edge of the hole in the end of the tank.

something." "That sounds just about like you. Think up another bright gem like that. Let's get inside."

"All right," George climbed up and started in headfirst. "We can get inside and start it rolling. His voice echoed with a hollow booming. "Wow!" he screamed, plunging madly to get in. Madam Cat had reached, sitting down and had given him a dig with her claws where it would do the most good. Herm flung water at her with his hands. His face was crimson with rage when he showed it again at the opening.

"You tormented fool, you!" he yelled. "What are you trying to do? Murder me?"

"Murder you!" Herm aimed a splash of water at the wildcat and struck George full in the face. "I saved your life, and you don't know enough to appreciate it. Wait—I'll come in with you, and we'll fight her."

By a mighty splash he drove the water to the other end of the tank and dived in like lightning. But, quick as he was, she was back and gave him a couple of good swipes before he got through the hole. Once inside, he and George took stock of their wounds and for a moment talked without quarrelling.

"Let's start it rolling and make it spin so fast the tormented critter will be rolled right under," George suggested.

"What's this?" Herm picked up a pall that was under his feet. "We can throw water enough with this so she'll just have to hop off and swim ashore."

"Then what's she going to do it?" asked George.

Herm regarded him thoughtfully. "It won't be you; you're wet now. So we've got to get out of here."

The plan of rolling the tank really seemed feasible, and they set to work.

The tank started slowly and sluggishly, but gained speed rapidly. Up overhead they could hear the claws of their fellow voyager scratching on the wet planks, while an angry snarl or two showed that she was not enjoying herself.

Faster and faster the tank rolled. The silence inside was only broken by the pounding feet and labored breathing of the two men. Suddenly they heard the beast's claws rattle down the side; then, with a strangled yowl, the animal plunged into the water.

With one accord, Herm and George started for the opening, but they tripped over the pall. The rolling tank carried them feet first half-way over; then they rolled back together in a tangle of arms, legs and dirty water. The tank soon stopped rolling. They scrambled to their feet; George pushed Herm aside and reached the hole first. But he soon regretted his haste. When he was halfway out of the hole he met Madam Cat, very wet, very angry and fully determined to give battle. It had not taken her long to get back on the tank.

"Murder! O murder!" George cried, with one hand on his bloody nose where the cat had raked him. He wriggled backward and fell in a heap on the bottom of the tub just as the snarling face of the cat appeared in the opening.

Scoping up pall after pall of water, Herm dashed it at the intruder and quickly drove her up on top. George sat up and tried to talk, but nothing except an inarticulate "yammer" came from his lips. No words could express his emotions.

"We could both get in one end," Herm suggested, "and with all this water that's in here maybe we could stand it on end and—"

"Fine!" snarled George. "If you duck the end with the hole in it you'll drown us both, and—"

"We'll just stand it on the other end," when the cat'll jump right down through the hole on us."

"No, she won't, because just as soon as she'd climbed up there we'd dump it over and just naturally throw her about seven rods."

George was skeptical but, since he could think of nothing himself, agreed to try the plan. The two retired to the end away from the hole, and their combined weight sank it deeply under. A man who had just arrived at the shore escorted by an excited woman saw his tank rise majestically up on one end. Climbing to the upper end, the bobcat peered malevolently into the hole. Then the tank was flung violently to one side.

And the cat—oh where was she? Ask of the winds that far around. With fragments strewn the sea. However the winds could not tell anything about the beast, because she had plunged headfirst into the hole. Grievous, indeed, were the lamentations that issued from within. Sounds here not all that came forth. George was too large for the hole, but he went through it just the same. He had to. He had help from behind, and Herm followed immediately.

They both climbed up on top, where they were content to sit quietly, much relieved to observe that the tank was equally content with her place inside. Presently a boat that had started to the rescue came up and towed them ashore. As soon as the boat grounded, Madam Cat vanished unlooked into the brush.

"Notice that woman smiling behind her hand while she was thanking us?" demanded George, as he steered the car with one hand and nursed his swollen nose with the other.

"If I look as bad as you do, I don't blame her at all," said Herm, tenderly taking an inventory of his scratches. Then he glanced at George and chuckled.

"I couldn't look as bad as you do," said George spitefully. "You've got about the same number of scratches and torn clothes as I have, but I'm almost handsome, and you're home as a stump fence to begin with."

FINDING OF ARM IN NIAGARA MAY BE DEATH PROOF

Evidence Shows Bristol Barber Was Dashed to Pieces in Leap.

Toronto, Ont., July 13.—"Feet accomplished, tell Dan." That was the message which Prof. Charles Stephens left Sunday to be cabled to his wife, so sure was he that he was going to successfully make the passage of Niagara Falls in his English-made barrel. Dan was his manager, who was supposed to have planned the performance through, but who did not show up.

"Professor Stephens lost in attempt," was the message actually sent across the ocean to the widow and her nine children in Bristol.

RIGHT ARM FOUND
Niagara Falls, Ont., July 13.—A right arm, believed to belong to Charles Stephens, who lost his life in an attempt to go over the Horseshoe last Sunday, was picked up at the Maid of the Mist landing stage. It is not possible to identify it with certainty. It is tattooed with a design of crossed hands and the words, "Forget me not, Anne."

WAS FOND OF "STUNTS"
New York, July 13.—Charles Stephens, who was killed in going over Niagara Falls in a barrel, was a barber extraordinary.

His hobby was performing spectacular stunts, for which he received three ribbons, five gold medals and six silver medals. His specialties included kissing a lion in its den, shaving customers in a lion's den, boxing in a lion's den and parachute descents from a balloon.

MUSIC—ALWAYS
"Make a large place in your life for music, and it will bring you a priceless reward."

All the desires of your heart will come closer to you as you become attuned to the rhythm and harmony of life.

In the hour of rest music will uplift your spirit and give refreshment to every faculty of your being.

In the hour of work you will rejoice in the strength and energy which music has given you.

In the hour of jubilee music will bring you thrills of delight that compensate you for all that is dull and commonplace.

In the hour of prayer music will quicken the aspiration of your soul and perfume your life with the breath of heaven.

In the hour of fellowship music will blend your spirit with others in unity and understanding.

In the hour of love music will enrich your heart with feelings that magnify the meaning of existence.

In the hour of memory music will unseal the treasures of the past and bring a sacred glory to the present.

In the hour of vision music will give the power and scope to your imagination, and bring into reality the things that were not.

In the hour of high purpose music will summon the potentialities of your soul and urge them forward to great and glorious achievement.

Such is the power of music; to this power open the doors of your soul, and there will enter into your life a greater fullness of all that makes for progress and joy.

CHEAPER FREIGHT RATES DEMANDED FOR LOCAL COAL

Toronto, July 16.—Alberta coal could take the place of the coal from the United States in the whole, and then part of Ontario, if a better freight rate could be obtained from the railways than that prevailing at the present time, according to S. A. Harrington, fuel administrator for the province, and with reasonable freight rates could be supplied to Sudbury, North Bay, points on the T. & N. O. and Soo railways, and other northern Ontario places, cheaper than American coal. It costs about $5.00 a ton less at the mines, Mr. Harrington said today, but at the present time, the rate per ton on coal from Hillcrest mines, Alberta, to Sudbury, Ontario, is over $17.00 a ton. It is believed that the board of railway commissioners is considering an application for a special rate.

TAR SANDS IN FAR NORTH WILL SOON BE VALUABLE

Ottawa, July 16.—An order-in-council gazetted this afternoon provided for the withdrawal from the lease or settlement of approximately 55,000 acres of land along the Athabasca river in Alberta. This action is taken, the order states, because representations have been made to the department of the interior that as a result of the investigation and research which has recently been undertaken, "it is confidently expected that a successful process will be shortly evolved for the extraction from the tar sands of the Athabasca river of oil, bitumen and other hydrocarbons in commercial quantities."

THE FACE IN THE GLASS

We ought to know our own faces, every line and feature, every line and shadow. We see them often enough in the mirror and surely have every opportunity to study them carefully. If we met ourselves in the street, we should probably know ourselves, though no doubt the meeting would bring us a good deal of puzzle and shock.

Yet, in spite of the mirror, it may be said that in a sense we never really see ourselves at any rate as others see us. How close and intimate is our knowledge of the faces of those we love! How we follow and study every little change of expression, treasure it and meditate on it, carry it about with us in silence and darkness and absence! What strange gleams of joy light those faces, what sudden gusts of passion and grief pass over them, what suggestions of mystery and anxiety and question, all reflected in them with absolute unconsciousness, with complete and utter indifference on the part of the owners to what they are expressing or how they express it.

As we pass through wave after wave of the uttering, stormy current of everyday life just such changes take place in our own features. What do we know about them? We see the face in the glass, the set face, the face that is seeing itself and is preoccupied for the moment with that seeing, with no room for all those other bewildering emotions and expressions that do not come at all when they are sought for and thought about. The face in the glass is a mask, something conscious, something artificial, never the face that our friends study and love as we love and study theirs.

So it is with the aid of the glass, we try to cultivate the amiable, all we get is a photographer's smile, and that is seeing itself and is preoccupied for the moment with that seeing, with no room for all those other bewildering emotions and expressions that do not come at all when they are sought for and thought about. The face in the glass is a mask, something conscious, something artificial, never the face that our friends study and love as we love and study theirs.

So it is with the aid of the glass, we try to cultivate the amiable, all we get is a photographer's smile, and everyone knows what that is. Yet there are people who apparently make a business of it. They study not only their features but their expressions, endeavor to produce in themselves what charms them in others, seek by practice to veneer an anxious or sneering or unkindly soul with a charming countenance and an engaging smile. They fail, and the result is artifice, pretense, convention, a vague sense in the beholder that the smile is not honest and the countenance not real.

There is but one sure way to look pleasant, and that is to feel pleasant.

SAD STORIES
(From an exchange)
The man speeded up to see if he could beat the train to the crossing. He couldn't.

The man struck a match to see if the gasoline tank was empty. It wasn't.

The man patted a strange bulldog on the head to see if the "critter" was affectionate. It wasn't.

The man looked down the barrel of his gun to see if it was loaded. It was.

The man touched an electric wire to see if it was alive. It was.

Education in Canada

Under the British North America Act of 1867 the right to legislate on matters respecting education in Canada was reserved exclusively to the provincial legislatures. In general throughout Canada there are two fundamental systems of education, one that of the Protestant communities here and the other that of the Roman Catholic communities in which education is united with the religious teaching of the church.

In all the provinces the cost of education is defrayed from the public revenue, private or local, and public and elementary education is absolutely free. With the exception of Quebec all the provinces have laws of compulsory school attendance, uniformity in the training of teachers, text books and curriculum of children.

Upon application the provincial government gives immediate financial assistance in the erection of new schools where settlement warrants it or increased attendance demands a larger school. Each year thousands of new schools are built throughout the length of the country especially in the overgrowing western provinces. Assistance in the payment of teachers is given by a system of grants. Nature study, manual instruction, school gardens, domestic science and technical education have been taken up energetically, whilst agriculture, which after all is the country's prime interest, is an important item in the curriculum of all schools.

In the cities and towns of the Dominion no expense is spared in the erection of handsome, spacious school buildings, where the conditions are the prime consideration and they form no mean part in the aggregate of Canada's fine public structures. Solitude is exerted in the health and the general welfare of the pupils is the plane of construction, and medical officers and health nurses superintend the physical well-being when they are in operation.

In the rural districts naturally where in the first settlement farms are often widely separated, scholastic facilities do not exist in the same perfection, though every thing is done by the education departments to meet the more difficult conditions and the child of the farmer need not fall behind his city brother in the progress of learning. The majority of the schools are ungraded, that is several small classes are taught by the one teacher, and the districts are of such dimensions as to make the school house easily accessible from the furthest limits. Fully trained teachers are provided from the provincial normal schools; attendance is compulsory as in the cities.

(1) Macdonald College, Ste. Anne de Bellevue, P.Q., where many Canadian teachers are trained.
(2) At the Agricultural College, Olds, Alta.
(3) A Group of Pupils at a Rural School in Western Canada.

Every province possesses finely tried, up-to-date facilities of scientific farming experts where the most progressive and modern methods of agriculture are taught and where the degree of Bachelor of Scientific Agriculture is conferred at graduation. As it is impossible for many of the sons and daughters of farmers to attend all the year round and complete the course, winter sessions are held in every province where short courses are given imparting a thorough training to boys and girls over the public school age in intelligent farming and scientific methods, domestic science and other phases of farm work. These courses have proved of immense interest and value and are widely appreciated by agricultural communities whilst the attendance is yearly increased as the benefits to be derived from these short terms are the more fully realized.

A Few Coal Pointers

BACKED BY FACTS

SAUNDERS CREEK COAL is a semi-bituminous coal, and is the highest grade of domestic coal mined in Alberta. The following is a clipping from The Western Coal Review, Winnipeg: "It is pleasing to note that developments are now taking place in the higher grade fields south-west of Edson and at Saunders Creek, Alta. The quality of coals as mined in these areas are of the highest character and possess properties that make them particularly suitable for summer stocking. At present only three mines in these areas are shipping, but as yet their output is very limited—the market has not been more than sampled." This is what the best Coal Authorities in Western Canada have to say for Saunders Creek Coal.

ROSEDALE COAL from the Drumheller Field, comes from the deepest seam, and is therefore the best coal mined in that field. The equipment for screening and the general handling of coal in the ROSEDALE Mine is the most up-to-date equipment of that of any mine in Western Canada. You can depend absolutely on the Rosedale coal being the cleanest and best screened coal from the Drumheller Field.

BLACK DIAMOND COAL from the Edmonton Field, is in the greatest demand of any of the northern coals. This should be absolute proof of its quality and the general satisfaction it is giving.

DINANT COAL is a cheaper coal. It is a clean, well screened coal, free from clinkers. It is not what we would recommend as a summer stocking coal, but the fact that our sales considerably more than doubled the previous year should prove its quality as a heat producer for winter use. We shall be pleased to book your orders now for fall delivery.

HILLCREST STEAM COAL is the highest grade of STEAM COAL mined in the Crows Nest District. According to Dominion Government Tests, Bulletin 27; 1920, only 125 lbs. of Hillcrest coal were used to produce 1,000 lbs. of steam. This was 10 per cent. better result than any other coal from the Crows Nest District, Alberta. This bulletin can be obtained from the Dept. of Mines, Ottawa, on request, free of charge.

When we say we are handling the very best of the different grades of coal mined in Alberta, we are making no reckless assertion, as we can verify our statement. Our long and extensive experience in the coal business placed us in a position to choose the best and secure the exclusive agencies for this district.
